Artsiom Parakhouski had two of the most productive seasons a player can have at Radford. He is one of the best rebounders in this draft and his size makes him an intriguing prospect. He is good around the rim and showed good strength throughout the year by getting good post position and finishing through contact. His upside is fairly high because he has only been playing organized basketball for about five years.

Due to his lack of experience, a lot of Parakhouski's skills are very raw. He does not possess a go-to post love yet and his face up game is still in the developmental stage. Parakhouski is not a great athlete and lacks lateral quickness. This probably means he will struggle defending athletic centers in the NBA. His wingspan is average at best for his size.
